able illness. It can be mild or . . . here are four broadly different types but there is no definite dividing line between them.
An individual case may change from one type to another or may even have the characteristics of more han one type.

In simple schizophrenia, there is gradual mental leterioration with little tendency to delusions and hallucinations. Paranoid schizophrenia is marked by uspiciousness and delusions of persecution. The ATATONIC patient tends to fluctuate between xtreme apathy and hyperactivity. In the hyper-ctive phase, erratic and confused behaviour are ften combined with delusions of grandeur. The atient with HEBEPHRENIA has incoherent speech, aughs and cries without cause, and generally ehaves in a bizarre way.
